TEACHING

Applied Statistics: Using Large Databases in Education Research

Graduate-level course designed to serve as a bridge between introductory statistics and econometrics and practical work with real, large-scale databases.

Cracking the Code: Understanding Research in Education and Social Policy

Undergraduate-level course (satisfies the School's Quantitative Reasoning requirement) designed to help students become better, and more critical, consumers of quantitative evidence. Specifically created for students who expect to read and interpret, rather than conduct, statistical analyses.

Education and Social Policy

Graduate-level introduction to public policy, providing a foundation for understanding and assessing education policies, focusing explicitly on what public policy is, how it comes about, the tools of policy analysis or the specifics of education policy.

Public Health Internship Preceptor

Independent advisor in the NYU Master of Public Health Program in the Global Institute of Public Health.
