Courtney Jackson is currently working at Golder Associates Inc., an international environmental engineering and consulting firm. She works on site investigations and compliance issues, as well as environmental due diligence for large corporations who need to meet state and federal environmental regulations.

Courtney had two internships while in the ECE program. Her first internship was with the Council on the Environment in New York City where she helped organize weekly lessons on the environment and energy and delivered them to local classrooms.

Her second internship was with the Mayor's Office of Environmental Coordination. She worked on the City Environmental Quality Review Manual, the PlaNYC 2030 publication released in April 2007, and on the city's Brownfield projects.

The ECE program and the varied internship experiences helped prepare her for an exciting career in environmental consulting.
