This Institute is designed to support participants in critically reflecting on race and racism in the U.S., with a specific focus on education. We will look at history, culture, and power, and how these combined forces have led to the distinct manifestations of institutional bias. Participants will engage in personal and group reflection in order to understand the hopeful nature of cultivating intentional anti-racist consciousness, and in doing so, begin to develop effective strategies for engaging students, families, co-workers, and institutional leadership in creating inclusive classrooms and thriving educational experiences and outcomes for all.

This Institute is open to anyone who has contact & influence over our students, school-based personnel, district personnel, parents, etc.

For more information, please contact Natalie Zwerger at nz11@nyu.edu